OPERATIONS OF THE SACRAMENTO POLICE DURING 1875.

F. D. Chamberlin, City Prison-keeper and Police Clerk, reports the operations of Sacramento's police force, the arrests, etc., for 1875, as follows:

Arson, 5; attempt to commit burglary, 3; assault, 5; assault to commit rape, 3; assault to murder, 20; assault to do great bodily injury, 3; assault with a deadly weapon, 1; attempt to commit arson, 1; attempt to commit petit larceny, 1; attempt to extort, 2; attempt to commit robbery, 1; abduction, 1; battery, 281; burglary, 2; bigamy, 1; contempt of Court, 21; cruelty to animals, 1; crime against nature, 1; conspiracy, 47; counterfeiting, 2; common drunkard, 23; cruelty to animals, 1; defaulting witness, 29; drawing deadly weapon, 15; defeating witness, 27; defaulting witness, 55; disturbing the peace, 479; drunk, 334; defaulting juror, 7; deserter, 5; exposure of person, 9; equitable ment, 11; escape from Insane Asylum, 5; entering into a house of ill fame, 18; evasion from prison, 4; extortion, 5; fraud, 1; forgery, 9; fugitive from justice, 1; grand larceny, 77; gambling, 5; housebreaking in the day time, 23; insane, 55; inmate en route, 4; kidnaping, 2; keeping house of ill fame, 6; keeping disorderly house, 1; libel, 3; lost woman, 1; lost boy, 2; manslaughter, 3; misdemeanor, 8; malicious mischief, 6; opening sealed letter, 1; on commitment, 1; obtaining money and goods under false pretenses, 16; petit larceny, 176; peace, 6; prisoners en route, 15; petit larceny (second offense), 1; resisting an officer, 12; receiving stolen goods, 1; runaway boys and girls 36; robbery, 7; swindling, 1; seduction, 1; sick woman, 4; sick man, 10; surrendered by bondsmen, 1; safe keeping, 19; suspicious character, 61; sampling of petit larceny, 13; suspicion of burglary, 31; surrender of murder, 1; suspicion of robbery, 12; suspicion of grand larceny, 5; threats against life, 7; violating city ordinances, 472; violating United States license laws, 1; vagrancy, 67. Total, 2,393. Lodgers, 405.

Five hundred and twelve warrants were issued during the year, of which 50 were returned not served.

The general health of the prisoners has been good and, with a few exceptions of fever and ague, there has been no sickness reported in the prison. There was no complaint as to the quality or quantity of the food, except a few prisoners who had enormous appetites; and thoughts they should have roast goose every day.

The number of meals furnished the persons confined in the city jail for the year was 15,011.

Four hundred and five persons were given lodgings and breakfast during the year. The great charity-heart of Sacramento begrudges no one a place at bread and a cup of coffee; but we should not be compelled through that name charity to feel all the needy from New York to San Francisco without State aid.

Two deaths occurred in the prison during the year—Henry Powers, brought in drunk, died March 9th, and Thomas Mansel, who poisoned himself, November 16, 1875.

Arrests in 1874, 2,627; in 1875, 2,930.

A Tramp's Experience in Prison Life.

[Boston Pilot.]

For a year past, hundreds of the convicts in the Massachusetts State Prison, have lived in idleness. The Warden says he cannot find work for them. The following is the bill of fare; and in these hard times it will be read with envy by thousands of honest men who are out of work, and thousands of families who are living on short allowance:

Sunday.—Breakfast.—Rich hash, white bread and coffee. Dinner.—Meat hash, Graham bread and coffee.

Monday.—Breakfast.—Fish hash, white bread and coffee. Dinner.—Corned beef and vegetables and white bread. Supper.—White bread and coffee.

Tuesday.—Breakfast.—Meat hash, White bread and coffee. Dinner.—Baked beans and brown bread. Supper.—White bread and coffee.

Wednesday.—Breakfast.—Mashed potatoes and salt pork, white bread and coffee. Dinner.—Beef soup and white bread. Supper.—White bread and coffee.

Thursday.—Breakfast.—Meat hash, white bread and coffee. Dinner.—Pea soup and white bread. Supper.—White bread and coffee.

Friday.—Breakfast.—Fish hash, white bread and coffee. Dinner.—Baked hash, and brown bread. Supper.—White bread and coffee.

Saturday.—Breakfast.—Meat hash, white bread and coffee. Dinner.—Beef soup and white bread. Supper.—White bread and coffee.

KARCHER'S HOTEL.

Now the story I'll tell you is not very fine,
So, on preface, I hung will not dwell;
My tale's of this city; its wonderful ways,
And the brazilers of Karcher's Hotel.

In the East I was told that here all was a feast,
And that no one went hungry to bed,
That the mountains bore silver—the rivers ran gold,
And that Fortune her fairest gifts shed,
Do you know a cheap lodging? a man one asked;
I am broke, and have nothing to sell.
"Oh, yes," was the answer, "they're full every night,
"You will find such at Karcher's Hotel."

"They have everything lovely, and everything neat,
"And when there, you'll be safe for the night;
"Though the hint "you're a vagrant," may not seem so sweet,
"It will not do to threaten or fight.
"There's a Chamberlain there, and he carries the keys,
"Who will see to your comfort as well;
"He'll insure against "burglars," so thats take your ease,
"Tis a model Chief Karcher's Hotel."

I went there and found that the story was true,
And some Lodgers there always remain,
They are seldom who have pre-emption in view—
On the blankets of which they obtain.
And when I shall write to my friends in the East,
On the wonders of gold lan-d is dwell,
There's one theme I shall speak of, 'twill not be the least,
'Tis the beauties of Karcher's Hotel,

And the guests were so genial, they showed me the blood,
Where some sorrowing wretch cut his throat,
And the bracket from which a Mongolian was launched
For the region Celestial to float,
And the interest thus was kept up through the night
To be lively each tried to excel,
Was the talent of each Shylock, or even Duval,
Was eclipsed there in Karcher's Hotel.

I had thought that society here was a sham,
And the Gold Sis le could boast no Bon-ton;
But I freely confess that I made a mistake
While I find all my prejudices gone.
In the capital halls there are many I know,
Who feel strange in such places to dwell,
They would feel more at home and be more in their place
I am sure, in Chief Karcher's Hotel.

Sacramento, March 9, 1876. W. K. W.

THE ROGUES' GALLERY.

What it Is—Where it is to be Found—How the Pictures are Taken.

SCENES AND INCIDENTS IN THE STUDIO.

The Brooklyn, N. Y., Daily Eagle, of the 15th inst., has a very readable and exceedingly interesting article on what is commonly known as the "Rogues' Gallery," the place at the police headquarters of our large cities where the photographs of criminals are taken and kept for future reference.

Of the many interesting places in the different departments at the police headquarters, it says, not one arouses so much curiosity, or gives to the visitor so much pleasure and gratification, as the inspection of the attractions in the Rogues' Gallery. Every visitor is anxious to see the Gallery, and yet of all the rooms and places in that building, but few people ever enjoy the pleasure of a visit to that place or view the pictures contained therein, and listen to the narration of the principal felons whose photographs adorn, as they suppose, its walls.

The public imagines the place to be a large room, around the walls of which are exposed the portraits of noted and will-be noted criminals. As they pass through the building they are, if the moral scenes and sights which present themselves on every side do not make them forgetful, ever on the lookout for the gallery. Should they, however, not become forgetful, but express a desire to see that interesting place, they will be referred to the Superintendent and he, if he thinks proper, will give them permission to view it. Every one is not allowed to look at the great collection, and the few, therefore, who do obtain this coveted permission, hasten to the sergeant of the detective squad, and announce to him their great desire, and present the written permission they have received to view the gallery. The sergeant smilingly arises from his chair, and going to the desk, on which, maybap, they are leaning, unlocks the drawers and exposes to their view a dozen large albums. As he takes one from its receptacle he hands with it an index to the visitor, in which is given the number of each picture, the name of the person whose likeness it is, and the crime for which he had been arrested.

"This is our Rogues' Gallery," he says, "and when you have gone through that section of it, I'll give you the second one."

"Why, I thought that there was a regular gallery, just like what we understand by a photographer's gallery?"

"So it is, only we don't distribute the pictures around as carelessly as they do in the picture galleries—we don't like to give such fellows so much freedom of room, they might get away from us, and it don't do to lose any of our little boys, for it is mighty hard to replace their beautiful mugs."

"How is that?"

"Well, for different reasons, one of which you will understand as you look through the album."

The visitor, as he examines each of the faces, cannot help but express the utmost surprise. There he looks upon the face of a fine looking man or a matronly woman, and says: "Who would judge them to be criminals?"

"NEVER JUDGE A MAN BY HIS LOOKS," says Charlie Frost, the Sergeant of the Detectives, in whose charge the gallery is. "The best men and women in their particular rackets are the very last persons you would judge to be in the business."

Other faces there are which the visitor declares to be hard ones, which any one could tell were those of bad people.

The Sergeant laughs, and says:

"Why, I'll venture a good deal that if you were to meet that fellow on the street, he would make you believe that he was what your fancy paints an honest man to be. But we all know him. He don't look that way now, nor will you see many pictures like that one there," he continued, pointing to the picture of a man whom it would be impossible to recognize. The fellow had his eyes closed, his mouth screwed out of shape, and all his features distorted. By the side of his head, grasping his ears, were two hands. "Pole fellow," he said, "is like others you will see, who swore they wouldn't have their pictures taken, and had to be forced in the chair and held while the photographer pointed the camera at them. During the past year, however," he continued, "we got rid of this class of customers, owing to the shrewdness and ability of the artist who now takes the pictures. He confers a great favor on the Department by working for us, for there are few first-class men who would work or have anything to do with us, as it, known, would injure their business, for people do not wish to patronize a place to which thieves and criminals are sent to be pictured."

The Sergeant, after explaining to the satisfaction of his visitors all they desired to know of the characters in his gallery, explained to them how the pictures were taken.

"When a criminal is brought here I take his pedigree—that is his name, age, occupation, residence, and his educational accomplishments, and then take a full description of him. Having done that I give the officer who arrested him a note to the photographer, and the officer conducts him to the gallery. I am unwilling to give the photographer's name, but we will call him Smith. Well, Smith he takes the picture, and when he has finished it he sends it to me, and I write on the back of it the description of the fellow and the crime for which he has been arrested. Then I place it in the gallery, marking on it a number. That fellow, then, as you have seen in the Index, is known to the whole force as number, say, 49."

"Interesting?" said the sergeant, answering a question. "Well, I tell you it is most interesting to see these fellows have their pictures taken. Why, Smith has told me some stories concerning some of these 'cases' as they prepared or were seated under his camera which were most amusing. Let me see—there was one which I now recall.

AN OFFICER OF THE FOURTH PRECINCT

arrested a German for stealing a horse. His guilt was evident and he was conveyed to the gallery. He objected and the officers were forced to drag him almost up the stairs. Before taking the chair that Smith fixed for him, he asked him if he did not think he was innocent. Smith replied that he did, and the fellow then swore that he would not have his picture taken. He became violent and demonstrative in his objections, so much so that the officer was forced to tie him in the chair, and then kneel behind him and hold his face steady by grasping his ears. Like all the obstinate customers he squinted his eyes and distorted his features so that it was impossible to get a good picture of him. Smith had tackled such fellows as him before, however, and resolved to tire him out in the distortion business. The fellow was long-winded and tired Smith. He then tried another game. Throwing open his camera, he adjusted the slide so it would come out easily, and then walked toward the officer."

"Sir," said he, pretending to be angry, "I am surprised that you would bring an innocent man here to have his picture taken and placed among rongha."

"Yaw," interrupted the prisoner, "I am surprised too."

"Keep quiet, my friend: don't say a word. An innocent man lets his friends talk for him," and then turning to the officer, he soundly berated him, saying, on seeing that the prisoner obeyed his injunction to keep quiet as he backed down the camera, "I believe that you cannot read, write or spell, as well as that poor man there."

"Yaw, dot is so."

"Can't I, then? well, just you try."

"I will," said the photographer, "and will hold a sign up here at the end of the room, and the man who first reads the letters in it correctly he, of course, is the best speller. Officer, you take the first turn, and if in two seconds you don't tell what it is, why, then my friend there will, I'm sure."

Mr. Smith then backed a little from the camera, and seeing the prisoner intently watching every movement he made, he pretended to stumble, drew the slide and fumbled about on the floor for the sign. When he had taken sufficient time for the impression, he covered the camera and withdrew the picture, saying he would get a book in his room from which they would read.

by the shoulder and ordered him to accompany him, saying, as he laughed at the trick that had been played upon him, "Come over to headquarters till I get you put into our school where you'll have to study and mind your p's and q's."

Of all the customers, however, with whom the photographer has most trouble, the women are the most annoying. If they desire to fix themselves so as to destroy their appearance on a card, the artist is forced to waste considerable time and that of an assistant before he can get them just as he desires. In these cases two cameras are used, one of which is concealed in a partition. As the photographer leaves the one which stands exposed, saying, "Oh, it is of no use, I can't take that woman," she relaxes her features from the strain which she has put upon it, and smiles complacently at her own smartness and the artist's apparent discomfiture. While in this pleasant mood he speaks to her, and she mildly looks at him. A few seconds suffice. The woman is told to go, and she departs, little thinking that there is a fine picture of her in the place—one much better, indeed, than she could have taken had she sat willingly for it, because it is more natural.

Young men and boys who, if not already noted criminals, but will be, are generally very anxious about having good pictures taken. Before seating themselves in front of the camera, they will arrange their clothing, dust their threadbare and soiled garments and comb their hair.

The photographer always pleases them, and promises to give any one of their friends, should they call, a copy of the picture.

With regard to the pictures of those who on trial are proven guiltless of the charge, their pictures, if it is their first offence, are destroyed with the negative.
